Wichita Falls Public Library Has DVD Players To Check Out

Wichita Falls, Texas – The Wichita Falls Public Library is bringing back a service last seen at the video store 40 years ago, but with a slightly more contemporary twist. Patrons can now check out DVD players just like any other book from the library. The kit comes with RCA and HDMI cables, a remote control, and even the instruction booklet. The library has two DVD players available, but more can be purchased if it proves to be a popular item.

"The library has a great collection of DVDs," Andrew Jelen, collections and technical services supervisor, said, "but not everyone still owns a DVD player."

The Library's video collection includes recent releases, many classic titles, new and old television series, documentaries, even filmed stage plays.

"Our streaming service through Hoopla will continue, of course," said Library Administrator Jana Hausburg, "but, we want to make sure our collections remain available to the entire community."

The DVD players check out for three weeks, the same as everything else at the library, but are limited to one per library card. Like everything else at the library, borrowers are responsible for loss or any damage to the players.

In the same everything-old-is-new-again vein, the library also has board games to check out. Perfect for those holiday family times.
